

ACT-I

SCENE-I

The opening credits:

The screen slowly transits from black to footage of a girl's (Sabika's) feet walking inside a house.

The camera constantly rises slowly and is now resting on a table on which the girl is keeping her water bottle.

The camera rises up even more and bumps swiftly into the wall, remaking the screen black.

The screen transits into an empty chair on which the girl throws her school bag.

End of opening credits

SCENE-II

The camera is still rising but stops at the girl's face, she is wearing a mask and untying her hair-ribbon.

V.O. : This is not your way of living, this is ours. It is 2081, exactly 75 years after the first officially recognised cyborg, Neil Harbisson. They are way more common now. Fortunately I am not one, I've heard people become machines. Some companies are even offering to make you immortal. Yes, no exclamation there because anyways everybody knows that's a lie, except the media, they are trying their best to prove it right. But it is what it is, and it is a lie.

The girl walks over to a sofa and switches on the laptop.

O.S. : Presenting to you latest headlines.

The camera goes down and bumps into her head and becomes black.

SCENE-III

The screen is still black.

O.S. (loud-girl): This is what I wanted to show you.

O.S. (news-reporter): Moving on we have..

Camera rises above girl's head now pointing at laptop, with news-reporter.

The camera zooms in. Only News channel is now visible.

News-reporter (Wasif): ... palladium jubilee of cyborgism. More than 500 people have become cyborgs now, and even more are thinking of being one. Technology is advancing at a great pace. Companies have started offering immortality for only $1M. To know whether they are right or wrong stay with us for The Night Debate.

Coming up next is, 1 year anniversary of the first operational space elevator, we will in this matter...

The girl pauses it.

O.S. : The rest is not so interesting.

The girl: I am feeling a little thirsty. But because of scarcity of water nowadays, we try our best to consume only needed water. Many Earthians have colonized Mars. The pollution on Earth has increased so much that you have to wear a mask everywhere except inside your house. To reduce plastic consumption people had started using edible water bottles. Come'n I'll show you one.

Camera zooms in on her and zooms out on the water, and zooms in again.

O.S. : This is it, it's tasteless if you're wondering. Also if you're wondering whether I'm familiar with trees or not, well they aren't so common to see now, are they?

The screen transits to black again and End Credits start.